DISQUALIFICATIONS

Bucks under 9 pounds. Does under 10 pounds.

Many breeders confuse the white toe, which is a disqualification, with the white pad or light colored hair or fur on bottom of feet.

The white from the pad should not extend upon top of toes but may be shown between toes. A white toe or foot, consists of a distinct spot of pure white hairs which is usually much whiter than the pad under the foot.

The term, "belly color as light colored as possible" does not mean that the belly must be pure snow white, but of a light gray or light slate gray color, which will show a distinct contrast, at breaking off line, at each side of stomach. Under color, meaning the color of the hair or fur beneath the outer surface. This under color on steels should be of a bluish steel or bluish slate color clear to the flesh.

	Points ----- 5
	Cuts----- 1 to 3

NOTE

The color of the markings should be a rich, velvety black. The more dense the color the better. The markings should be on the nose, ears, feet and tail. The nose marking should be large and well rounded. It should come well up the face, between the eyes, and be clean cut and distinct all around. It should be dense all over. Many fail on the sides of the nose marking, the color being weak on the edges. The ears should be entirely black and well covered with fur. They should be short and neat, tapering to the tips. They should be set fairly close together, and not carried apart. The fore feet should be black right to the top of the legs and they should be cut clean there. The higher the marking comes up the leg the better. The same remarks apply to the hind feet. The tail should also be black. The eye required is a pink one, as bright and bold as possible.

In shape the Himalayan should be snaky. A short, cobby rabbit is not desirable. At the same time, a big specimen is not the thing to aim for. Whilst it must be snaky, it should also be small and neat. The long, snaky bodied rabbit shows its markings off to much greater advantage than does a short, cobby one. The coat is white except on the markings, and it must be pure in color and free from stains of any description.

NOTE

The ideal color in a Gray. (White and Black.) The white is always referred to as the silvering. The black being termed the color. At the tip of the fur the color should be a rich blue black, with plenty of life and lustre in it.

The undercolor (when the fur is blown aside), should be of a blue shade and extend as far towards the roots of the fur as possible. Be sure not to get or encourage an undercolor of a pale, smoky shade, or a fur which is almost white next to the skin. There should be no brown or rusty tinge on the feet or body.

FAWNS: Should be of a deep, bright orange shade, extending as far down towards the skin as possible. This color should extend over the body, head, ears, feet and tail. There should be no suspicion of brickiness about the color of a Silver Fawn, neither should it have a gray tinge.

BROWNS: There are really four colors instead of two. The essential color is the deep, bright CHESTNUT and should extend as far down towards the skin as possible. The bottom color should be a SLATY BLUE, deep and bright, and should not show anywhere except in the bottom half of the fur. Next comes the SILVERING or white hairs, which should be evenly distributed among the colored ones. Then comes the TICKING which should be even all over the rabbit. On the surface of the fur, brown, white and black must be in evidence and should be in equal proportion.

Otherwise he forfeits all entry fees, all prize money and all other premiums, as well as the right to have his rabbits remain in the show room. To Members of The National Breeders' & Fanciers' Association of America:

The color of the cover of this book or a shade lighter was selected as the official color of the N. B. & F. A., so that all members could paint their shipping coops the same color and they would be recognized at once as pet stock carriers which would be a help to Superintendents of shows when separating them from poultry, etc., and would give our stock better attention.

A number of our members are engaged in the railway service and they would readily recognize the coops and see that they get the best of attention.

It is also recommended that members paint on their coops "Return to (name and address), member of N. B. & F. A."

It is also recommended that you paint hutches and houses the same color so your place may be easily recognized from the road, street cars or train.

This is an economical color, as it can be produced with white lead and oil, adding a very little lamp black until you get the right shade.
